Israel To Continue To Expand Commerce And Insist On Free Use Of Suez

United Nations Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold "now stands helpless before the Egyptian dictator's door," Foreign Minister Golda Meier said in Jerusalem in the first official Israeli comment on the United Arab Republic's detention of a ship carrying Israeli goods. Mrs. Meir's speech, which warned that Israel would "persist in our struggle" to use the Suez Canal, was as much a criticism of Mr. Hammarskjold and several unnamed friendly nations that "displayed such endless patience" with U. A. R. President Gamal Abdel Nasser as an attack on the U. A. R. President himself.

President Nasser, Mrs. Meir told the Knesset (Parliament), "betrayed" Mr. Hammarskjold and several powers when the tiny Greek freighter Astypalia was detained at Port Said with a cargo of Israel-produced cement, says the New York Herald Tribune. In explanation, Mrs. Meir said Mr. Hammarskjold had assured Israel he had reason to believe the U. A. R. would permit Israel to send export cargoes through the canal providing the cargoes were sent F. O. B. — in ownership of purchaser.

Declaring Israel had tried this method with the Astypalia, she said Mr. Hammarskjold "now stands helpless before the Egyptian dictator's door." Mrs. Meir warned that Israel "is not prepared to be the victim of a policy of appeasement." Israel, she said, would continue its efforts to expand commercial relations "with countries near and far" and would continue to insist on its right to "free and non-discriminatory use" of the Suez.

The Foreign Minister spoke in reply to a motion from two Right-wing opposition parties for debate on the Astypalia case. The entire House, with the exception of abstaining Communists, approved her request that the issue be referred to the Knesset's Foreign Affairs Committee, whose sessions are closed.

Mrs. Meir sharply criticized the World Bank for granting $56,000,000 loan to the U. A. R. for improvement of the canal, says the New York Herald Tribune. President Nasser would regard this action, she said, as encouragement to stop other vessels with Israeli cargo. The various powers which both pushed the loan and urged Israel to put faith in quiet diplomacy, she added, "have reached the stage when Nasser is ready to show consideration for them only insofar as they are ready to shower him with benefits."

Giving details of the Astypalia case for the first time, Mrs. Meir said Israel gave prior notification of the ship's sailing to the U.N. Secretary-General and to all friendly powers that had urged adoption of the F. O. B. shipping method. Constant contact was maintained with them.

Israel further imposed a complete blackout on the ship's movements, she said, to forestall the argument put forward when the U. A. R. last May detained the Danish freighter Inge Toft with Israeli cargo — namely that the ship was held up because of advance publicity, says the New York Herald Tribune. Official reaction in the Astypalia case, she said, was delayed to enable Mr. Hammarskjold to act without President Nasser being able to complain that the question had turned into a test of strength with Israel.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is not sponsored by a group or an organization and which is able to claim membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

U. S. Labor Men Urge More Support Of Histadrut

American labor leaders called for intensified financial support of Histadrut, Israel's labor federation, citing it as a "vital force" in Israel's democratic structure. These assertions, as well as emphasis on the fact that Israel "will never succumb to the lures of Fascism or Communism," were made at the thirty-sixth annual convention of the National Committee for Labor Israel, the fund-raising arm of Histadrut.

Speaking at a luncheon session at the Commodore Hotel, in New York, Louis Hollander, chairman of merged labor's executive council in New York State, characterized Israel as a "democratic island, the only government in the Middle East devoted to democracy," says the New York Times. Mr. Hollander, vice-president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, called on the United States to support Israel. He spoke before the American Trade Union Council, a branch of the National Committee for Labor Israel that is composed of labor leaders.

The democratic character of Israel's labor movement was stressed by Louis Stulberg, secretary-treasurer of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union. Isaiah Avrech, former director general of the Israel Ministry of Education and Culture and now American representative of the Histadrut Executive, declared that "workers in America and in Israel belong to a world which didn't lose its belief, a world which has faith in man, in the sanctity of the life of every human being, and in the sanctity of its freedom."

Edward B. Lawson, former U. S. Ambassador to Israel, told how, during his four and a half years of duty in Israel, "it became clear that a special bond of friendship and understanding existed between the working man of Israel and American labor organizations." He referred to Histadrut as "one of the most unusual trade unions in the free world."

Leon H. Keyserling, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors in the Administration of former President Harry S. Truman, declared that Israel "is demonstrating that an economic system based on responsible freedom need not fear the competition of the totalitarian economies.", says the New York Times.

Yosef Almogi, a member of Israel's Knesset (parliament), said that "since Israel is a land of pioneers, and has a population composed largely of productive workers in many economic spheres, it will never succumb to the lures of Communism or Fascism."

Avraham Harman, Israel's Ambassador to the United States was the guest of honor at the evening session, held at the High School of Fashion Industries, 225 West Twenty-fourth Street.

W. Z. O. To Plan For Non-Zionist Groups This Year

At the suggestion of Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Zionist Organization, the Zionist Actions Committee at a meeting in Jerusalem last June adopted a resolution calling for a revision of the constitution. Final action upon it will be taken by the World Zionist Congress next year.

In its present framework, the Organization is composed of Zionist groups over the world that have varying ideological concepts, says the New York Times. Membership is on the basis of joining the Zionist groups. With the contemplated revision, non-Zionist groups can join without affiliation with the existing Zionist bodies.

Dr. Goldmann explained to a press conference in New York that with the establishment of Israel as a nation the world Zionist movement had abandoned its political aspects and become primarily an educational and moral force, devoting itself also to intensifying financial support of Israel.

At its biennial session, the United Synagogue of America, the congregational arm of Conservative Judaism, debated affiliation with the World Zionist Organization and tabled the issue until 1961. The revision by the Organization of its constitution to permit non-Zionist Jewish groups to affiliate with it marks a departure from the practice of sixty-two years, and is designed to strengthen cultural and spiritual activity among Jews. Dr. Goldmann said that a collateral effect of the constitutional change would be to intensify financial and moral support for Israel. He said that "Jewish life suffers from too many groups doing things without coordination," especially in the U.S., and that affiliation of major groups with the W. Z. O. is especially sought in Britain and Latin America.

The World Zionist Organization was established in 1897, soon after the first meeting of the World Zionist Congress in Basle, Switzerland, at which Theodor Herzl, the late Viennese journalist and founder of political Zionism, presided. Dr. Herzl was its first president. Its main objective was the establishment of a Jewish nation in Palestine.

Dr. Goldmann is also chairman of the Jewish Agency for Israel, which carries out programs of settlement and rehabilitation

Pioneer Set Up First Psychiatric Day Hospital In U. S.

Dr. Bernard S. Robbins, aged fifty-four years, professor of clinical psychiatry at New York Medical College since 1940, who died at his home, 1175 York Avenue, in New York after a brief illness, was responsible, with other psychoanalysts, in organizing in 1944 the psychoanalytical training center at the New York Medical College, says the New York Times. This was the first such center to be affiliated with a medical school, and the move has resulted in a trend toward re-integration of psychoanalysis with medical education.

Twenty years ago, Dr. Robbins, with other psychoanalysts, including Dr. Erich Fromm and Dr. William Silverberg and the late Drs. Karen Horney and Clara Thompson, broke away from the traditional psychoanalytical approach.

After receiving his medical degree from the University of Cincinnati Medical College in 1928, Dr. Robbins was trained in psychiatry in the United States Navy, the Midfield State Hospital in Massachusetts, and the Sheppard and Enoch Pratt Hospital in Maryland.

He was attending psychiatrist at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University in 1935 and consultant at the United States Veterans' Hospital in Lyons, N.Y. in 1948. Seven years later, he established the Robbins Institute in New York which, as the first psychiatric day hospital in the U.S., studied the need and value of day hospital care for psychiatric patients.

Dr. Robbins was one of the founders of the American Academy of Psychoanalysis and past president of the Association for the Advancement of Psychoanalysis and of the New York Medical Society. He was a fellow of the American Association of Psychiatry, the New York Academy of Medicine and the Board of Neurology and Psychiatry, says the New York Times. He belonged to many other professional organizations.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Lee Fraidin Robbins; two daughters, Mrs. Irma Robbins Feder and Dr. Lee Robbins Gardner, and a son, Bernard Jay Robbins.

Technion Center In Israel To Impart U.S. Know-How

The American Technion Society will establish a technological center in Israel to accelerate the industrial development of that country. Details of the plan were outlined by Jacob R. Sensibar, newly-elected president of the Society, which sponsors Israel's only university-level engineering institution, the Technion-Israel Institute of Technology, in Haifa.

Speaking at the Society's headquarters at 1000 Fifth Avenue in New York, Mr. Sensibar said that Israel's urgent need is a balanced economy in the shortest possible time." He added that the projected technological center would in effect be an extension of the Technion's teaching and research functions.

Under the plan, American business and industrial executives will exhibit molds, dies and finished products of American manufacture at the center, which will be on the Haifa campus, says the New York Times. Mr. Sensibar said Israeli industrialists seeking to expand their manufacturing facilities would be able to study the American products on exhibit at the center and would be able to learn the techniques of American manufacturing and distribution methods through meetings with the American exhibitors.

Mr. Sensibar who heads the Construction Aggregates Corporation of Chicago, said that the proposed technological center would act "as a practical, down-to-earth clearing house of information where successful American industrialists and engineers could impart their know-how and experience to Israel's industrialists and business leaders."

He said the center would be established in the near future. The Society numbers 15,000 engineers, scientists, technicians and industrialists.

HADASSAH STRIDES AHEAD WITH EIGHTEENTH BIENNIAL CONVENTION IN MONTREAL

The Hadassah-Wizo Organization of Canada passed three major resolutions during its 18th biennial convention, at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel in Montreal. It was resolved that the organizations ask the government as a member of the United Nations, to bring to the attention of that body the deep concern felt as a result of the fresh demonstration of anti-Semitism in different parts of the country.

Recognition of World Refugee Year was urged, as was the continued support to the State of Israel through the continuing purchase of bonds by members.

It was pointed out that the bonds have made it possible for Israel to undertake and successfully conduct major industrial development which strengthens and furthers the economic stability of the country.

Mrs. Harry Cohen, of Montreal and Sydney, N.S., was elected president of Hadassah-Wizo at the largest convention the 15,000-member group has ever had. Attendance was more than twice the previous record.

Other officers are: Meadames Anna Raginsky, Rosa Singer and William Riven, of Montreal; and Mrs. D. P. Gotlieb, of Winnipeg, honorary presidents; Ezra Lozinski, Montreal, honorary vice-president; Charles Eisenstat, Montreal; Mark Levy, Toronto, H. Sokolov, Winnipeg; B. M. Alexandor, Ottawa, vice-presidents; H. Wisenthal, Montreal, treasurer; B. M. Bloomfield, Montreal, financial secretary; Hyman Heft, Montreal, corresponding secretary; B. Cooper, Toronto, recording secretary; regional chairmen: C. Groberman, Vancouver; S. Moscovitch, Lethbridge, Alberta; J. M. Bernstein, Winnipeg; J. Devor, Toronto; J. Alexandroff, Hamilton; M. Kert, Sault Ste. Marie; I. B. Ezra, Windsor; J. C. Horwitz, Ottawa; S. Chait, Montreal; Irving Pink, Yarmouth, N.S.; and Ben Medjuck, Fredericton, N.B.

Mrs. Harry Cohen, a mother of three, has given up her home in Sydney, N.S., to move to Montreal for her term as National President of Hadassah-Wizo because Montreal is Hadassah headquarters.

It has been general knowledge within Hadassah for several years that Mrs. Cohen would be the 1960-61 president. Two years ago, when her maximum allowable term as national vice-president expired, and Mrs. William Riven was re-elected president for another two years, Hadassah created a new office, — Dominion vice-president, to keep Mrs. Cohen eligible for the presidency.

The Dominion office was dissolved when Mrs. Cohen became president. Hadassah executives say it is quite possible it will never again be re-opened.

"The Hadassah presidency is a demanding office," Mrs. Cohen said in an interview. "There are emergencies from time to time when precarious situations arise in the State of Israel. I want to be at headquarters at those times when I am needed most. It can be any hour or any day."

Her devotion to communal service does not stop at Hadassah. She is on the executive of several organizations in Nova Scotia, including the Canadian Cancer Society, the Canadian Foundation of Poliomyelitis' March of Dimes, and the Nova Scotia United Appeal of Community Chest.

Mrs. Cohen has a Medal of Merit from the Canadian Red Cross for which she worked from the day World War II was declared until 1950. As director of all Red Cross volunteer work at five hospitals in Cape Breton, she had charge of the care of survivors of air and sea tragedies off the Canadian coast.

With a personal cheque she received from a group of grateful United States servicemen, who had been torpedoed, she set up the first Red Cross Recreational Centre in Cape Breton. Mrs. Cohen said she intends to continue her work in Nova Scotia by travelling back and forth as the need arises.

"From now on I'll have to plan my life very carefully," she said. "I believe the secret of getting things done is to have a system. "You can get anything done if you are an early riser," she said. "I am. For 32 married years I have spent my full days in community work but I keep all evenings free for my family." She hires help for housework.

Mrs. Cohen has one married son, Stewart, of Montreal. She has a granddaughter six months old. Two others she calls sons, are Joseph and Sigmund Gruber, of Montreal, who were "adopted" in 1948 when a Federal Order-in-Council admitted 1,200 Jewish European orphans into Canada for resettlement in Jewish homes. The brothers now are Canadian citizens.

Hadassah-Wizo, one of the few voluntary women's organizations in Canada that raises $1,000,000 annually, disclosed how it obtains some of the funds to help support almost 1,000 institutions and services in Israel. One of its main sources of funds is a program of bazaars, held annually in almost every one of the 80 Canadian centres where Hadassah has members. The bazaars are described by bazaar chairmen as "indispensable."

Mrs. Arnold Epstein, chairman of the Toronto bazaar, Hadassah's largest, told delegates at the 18th biennial convention, that it raises a minimum of $100,000 annually during a one-day bazaar. The profit last year was $116,489. Montreal's 1959 bazaar raised $90,000; and Vancouver's, $25,000.

The three top money-raisers at last year's Toronto bazaar were a white elephant booth, which made $2,000; a cocktail lounge for which a banquet liquor permit was obtained — $1,400 profit; and a sale of advertising space to businessmen on a 20-foot high model of the lighthouse at Eilat, on the Israeli coast of the Gulf of Aqaba, which made $7,000.

Mrs. William Riven, said Canada's Hadassah has launched a program to build a hall on the campus of Jerusalem's Hebrew university that will be named for Canada's former Governor-General, Vincent Massey. She told the 700 delegates that the hall will be the entrance to a building that will house the Dead Sea Scrolls and other manuscripts and objects of art that have Jewish historical significance.

Her report said that during the last four years Canadian Hadassah funds have built a polio rehabilitation centre at Sarafund, the only one serving the Middle East; Canada Hall at the Hebrew University with surrounding gardens named for former Canadian Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent; and at Hadassim, a children's village, it has financed a new dormitory, high school building, teachers' seminary, science laboratories, kitchens, and dining rooms.

Other contributions to Israel include a new first aid clinic, affiliated with Israel's Red Cross, at Kfar Saba, and a temporary gynecological hospital at Eilat, pending construction of a permanent hospital. Up to now the only hospital of this type has been at Tel Aviv.

Hadassah's future plans call for promotion of greater understanding between Canada and Israel through a three-point program: Arranged tours to Israel, a cultural exchange program, and fellowships that will sponsor university student exchange programs between Canada and Israel.

One of Montreal's main fundraisers is a fashion show with original models donated by top international designers. After the show, the clothes are sold. Mrs. A. Shulman, bazaar chairman, said that last year the fashion show put $2,500 in the Hadassah treasury. Vancouver Hadassah made $1,000 from the sale of replated picture frames rescued from junk yards. Hadassah members bought disreputable-looking frames in lots of nine for a $1. To get them replated professionally without cost two Hadassah members worked for a day as shipping clerks in the replater's factory.

Pierre Mendes-France, former French premier and now a free-lance world economic adviser, said that free world technology and monetary aid must be the weapons to fight the Russian imperialistic challenge. The Royal Bank of Canada

James Muir declares recent experience contains lessons for combating future booms and slumps

Leadership and self-discipline needed to maintain trade position, living standards and economic growth.

"It is not commonly recognized" declared James Muir, Chairman and President of The Royal Bank of Canada, at the bank's Annual Meeting in Montreal on Thursday, January 14th, "that the banks have given a demonstration of timely and effective support of the current anti-inflationary monetary policy."

Reviewing the necessary and effective decisions and actions taken by the monetary authorities during the recent credit 'freeze and thaw' period, Mr. Muir said, "Before indulging unduly in self-congratulation, it may be well to reflect on some lessons which recent experience holds for the monetary authorities and for the chartered banks in combating future booms and slumps.

LESSONS TO BE LEARNED

"The first lesson is that there is need for improved communication between the Bank of Canada and the chartered banks. Of course, communication must be a two-way street. I have long deplored the passing of bankrate in Canada from the realm of communication in this sense to a mere shadow, floating ¼% above the market rate for three month Treasury bills.

"In recent months, the Bank of Canada has assured us that the money supply will probably rise modestly in recession, stay relatively constant in recovery and boom times, and rarely, if ever, fall. In our present situation, for example, this should mean that the current ease in chartered-bank cash will not prompt a sucking up of the excess, since that would mean a significant reduction in the money supply. The clear implication is for the banks to use their cash for investment or, when needed, for increased loans.

"Now for the second lesson. Regardless of the clarity of communication itself, there is still some ambiguity in the data communicated. For example, through its control of chartered bank cash reserves, the Bank of Canada controls the money supply, allowing of course for any lags in chartered bank adjustment. There are, I believe, two major ambiguities in our concept of the money supply.

AMBIGUITIES

"The first ambiguity is that the money supply as generally defined omits credit created by other than the chartered Banks. For example, it omits credit created by Finance Companies, Caisses Populaires in Quebec, Credit Unions and Provincial Savings Offices in other Provinces, Trust Companies doing a deposit business, and all varieties of department store charge accounts.

"The implication of this ambiguity for policy is simply this, that monetary control is inhibited and may at times be ineffective, as well as inequitable, in controlling the money supply in this broader sense. Rather than extend the range of specific government regulation, it might be worth while to require that these lenders (who, in effect, do a banking business so far as the total supply of money and credit is concerned) should, like the chartered banks, be subject to appropriate cash, or other, reserve requirements.

"The second ambiguity in our concept of the money supply concerns that well-known but elusive factor, the "velocity of circulation". Clearly the inflationary potential of any given money supply depends not only on the money supply as such but also on its activity; that is, its velocity of circulation. Our mechanism of monetary control is defective in that it ignores the velocity dimension, and this defect forces us to resort to rough-and-ready, trial-and-error expedients by way of correction. Monetary control would be greatly improved if we could devise a practical formula for reserves against deposits that would take account of changes in the velocity of circulation.

"The third lesson of recent experience is that the course of monetary control would run much smoother if the chartered banks were enabled always to implement Bank of Canada policy by allowing their lending rates to reflect changes in market rates, or under the present rate-fixing system, changes in bank-rate. 'The market for credit,' said the British Radcliffe Committee, 'is a single market' and the Governor of the Bank of Canada has recently expressed a similar point of view. But in a single market only one price can rule for any given commodity. It is absurd, therefore, for bank lending rates to be subject to price control while other rates by other lenders are allowed to reflect market conditions.

"However, if chartered bank lending rates were made more flexible most of the difficulties could be avoided without abolishing the maximum rate principle. For example, a 'minimum' ceiling, set at the present 6 per cent, could be made adjustable upward when necessary to a level not more than one percentage point above the 91 day Treasury bill rate or (the same thing) ¾ of a percentage point above bankrate. Such an arrangement would greatly ease the banks' problems of allocating credit in a tight money situation.

"There would be no 'tight money'," said Mr. Muir, "if the price were right; instead, those willing to pay interest at current market rates would get the funds, those unwilling to pay these rates would postpone expansion until the price of funds became more favourable."

BANKS MEET TIGHT MONEY CHALLENGE

"Denied the use of the price system to allocate credit in accordance with market forces," said Mr. Muir, "banks were forced into the thankless task of rationing credit as best they could among their customers.

"But they did more than this. The chartered banks supplied the credit necessary to finance the subsequent revival. To do this, they sold securities, mainly government bonds, sometimes at a cost in terms of yield rates well above even their maximum lending rate, in order to raise cash to increase loans to deserving borrowers, large and small, by almost $1.2 billion between Sept. 30, 1958 and Sept. 30, 1959.

"The savings of the general public, who bought the bonds, were channelled into new loans to businessmen, farmers and consumers. There was no creation of new money, only the channelling of savings into loans through the mobilization by the banks of the existing money supply."

Loans increase despite restrictions

K. M. Sedgewick, General Manager, reported that due to heightened business activity, loans in all categories and sizes were in strong demand throughout the year and despite the necessity of adopting restrictive measures from time to time, a sizable increase had taken place in this department of the bank's business. "It is interesting to note," said Mr. Sedgewick, "that the number of our borrowers in Canada increased by approximately 45,000 during the year."

Capital funds of the bank now exceed $256 millions and assets stand at more than four billion dollars. "Our depositors now number well in excess of three million," said Mr. Sedgewick. "This includes a very substantial percentage of the Canadian depositing public — a fact which pleases us greatly. It is our aim to compete aggressively for continued growth in this field."

ACTIVITIES ABROAD

Referring to the Royal Bank's extensive system of branches in the Caribbean area and South America, Mr. Sedgewick mentioned that seven new offices had been added to the overseas system during the year. New main office buildings were nearing completion in Jamaica and the Dominican Republic and major additions are underway at a number of other points. "We have an important chain of branches distributed throughout most of the Western Hemisphere countries," said Mr. Sedgewick. "Our Managers there are fluent in the language and well versed with local conditions and customs. We are well equipped to assist exporters and we invite those who have a real interest in new trading opportunities to come to us and enlist our aid."

TRADE POLICY

Referring to the forthcoming meeting of the member nations of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (or GATT), Mr. Muir said: "It is paradoxical, but nonetheless true, that the economic renaissance in Europe seems now to pose some kind of threat to our increasingly easy North American way of life. Meanwhile, prosperity and increased efficiency have made European nations more receptive to freer trade, including the reduction or removal of war and post-war exchange controls. The present conciliatory attitude of the Europeans provides an opportunity for bold action to turn the new developments into means to freer trade on a broader basis for the benefit of all members of GATT. At the same time, Canada in particular must pay attention to recent development in Latin America. Current moves to form a Latin American common market and a regional trading group in Central America may pose additional problems but they also create opportunities. It cannot be emphasized too strongly that the removal of trade and exchange-control curbs in Europe and the slow awakening of Russia and the Far East mean the creation of new and exciting opportunities to exploit entirely new post-war markets.

"I believe," concluded Mr. Muir, "that Canadians have the courage demanded by the march of events in the 1960's and the will to achieve the even richer promise of decades still to come. With our material blessings, these qualities are all we need to make Canada a leader and an example, to all the eager young countries — in Latin America, in Africa, in Asia — which even now are, like us, striving to meet the great problems, and to achieve the even greater rewards, of a sustained, balanced, healthy economic growth in a tough competitive, but, let us fervently hope, an essentially peaceful economy of nations."

HADASSAH STRIDES AHEAD WITH 18th BIENNIAL CONVENTION IN MONTREAL

sah Organization of Canada held in the Queen Elizabeth Hotel.

He told the sell-out audience that new underdeveloped countries have become a "battlefield where a struggle is waged between the East and the West. While it involves no loss of life, it is a struggle with political consequences of colossal magnitude." He said the Communist countries — Russia, China and their satellites — are using aid to underdeveloped countries as a prestige measure, cloaking their more ulterior motives.

"In other words," he said, "much importance should be attributed to the technical assistance which the USSR has developed on a broad scale during the last two or three years by distributing very widely fellowships to young undergraduates who come from far-flung countries in the course of development with an increasing, and already enormous, number of engineers and experts."

Mendes-France said Israel was an excellent example of the effect of free world monetary and technical aid, and also of the intelligent application of the aid to the country's economy. He said: "If the Western world wishes to back with any effectiveness those underdeveloped countries which are turning to us, it will have to give some priority to everything that provides for the creation on the spot, of the elites and cadres without whom nothing really consistent can be built."

"The fight against illiteracy," he said, "the mass training of specialists and engineers, research workers and of better skilled workers for modern agriculture and industry, the training of young men for the tasks which the evolution of their country imposes on them, such are the forms of technical assistance which in the past have not benefited by the priority to which they are entitled."

I. L. Kenen, who promotes friendship for Israel in Washington, told the Hadassah-WIZO convention that while providing economic aid without ties to Arab countries, the free world is creating problems for itself in the Middle East. He said that the West, having abandoned efforts to turn the Arabs into allies, is providing aid to President Nasser after having been lulled into complacency by an impression that the Arabs are neutralists.

"Past history should have taught us better," he told the Jewish women's organization. "The Arabs are not for sale — they are for rent, on short-term leases." He said that while the Arabs are accepting economic aid from the West, they are buying arms from Russia and pay Russia with the money they get from the West.

The Communists, in turn, were using the money to penetrate into Africa and Asia. He said Israel does not object to aid for Arab countries, but believes the Arabs should be forced to give concessions in return. They should not be allowed to sit on the fence.

"The West is working on the premise that the greatest problem in the Middle East is the dispute between the Arabs and Israel. "The Arab-Israeli dispute is merely a reflection of the real problem — the inability of the Middle East governments to make the maximum use of their land and water which would improve their economic standards," he said. With higher standards Communism would lose its attraction.

He said Israel's greatest contribution to the free world is the success it has had in making its arid land productive. Governments of Africa and the Middle East now were sending delegates to Israel to study its techniques.

He stressed that the United Jewish Appeal must be strongly supported because of the heavy immigration to Israel in recent years.

She wore a floor length, princess gown of white silk, fashioned with a fitted bodice; and scooped neckline, with appliqued lace and pearls; long, lily-pointed sleeves; and a skirt, arranged in gradual fullness from the waistline, with a full, wide flounce with a short train. Her finger tip veil of tulle illusion was held in place by a coronet of rhinestones and mother-of-pearl flowers. She carried a white bible, with white and blue orchids, streamers of stephanotis and white rose buds, on white satin ribbons. The matron of honour was Mrs. Leo Jazwickl, of Kingston, Ont., in a baby-blue sheath dress of peau de soie, with a matching hat, and short veil. She carried a cascade bouquet of deep pink rosebuds, surrounded by white baby carnations. Miss Meryl A. York, of Toronto, Ont., was bridesmaid, in a blue peau de soie, princess dress, with a matching hat and short veil. The Restored Jewish Life Overseas Is Being Tended With Devotion

BY HENRIETTA K. BUCKMAN, OF THE JOINT DISTRIBUTION COMMITTEE

What the Joint Distribution Committee, major American agency helping distressed Jews overseas, has done for needy Jews in its four and a half decades of existence, is widely known. "Joint" is a pet name in the farthest corners of the globe wherever Jews abide. It is, however, important to know that material assistance is not the only thing in the Joint's program. Included in the world-wide welfare program are cultural and religious needs which constitute an important phase of its overall program. Immediately upon coming to life in 1914, the Joint realized that spiritual assistance was as essential as material or physical aid and appointed a special committee to attend to that phase of its welfare work.

The first chairman of the Committee on Cultural-Religious Affairs was the late Dr. Cyrus Adler, noted Jewish scholar, who contributed a great deal to devastated Jewish life after the First World War and until the outbreak of the second. After Dr. Adler's demise in 1940, Rabbi Dr. Leo Jung, noted Orthodox leader of the Jewish Center in New York, assumed the chairmanship of the committee which he holds to day.

Along with physical and material assistance which the Joint has brought to distressed Jews everywhere, went spiritual help, which included educational institutions, synagogues, books, newspapers, periodicals, support of rabbis, maintenance of yeshivot (seminaries), opportunity to observe Kashrut (the dietary laws); observance of Passover, and other holidays, etc. Millions of dollars have been expended for such needs in the four and a half decades of the Joint's existence. In the summer of 1945, for instance, when Joint functionaries, including qualified educators, entered the DP camps, the first thing they did was to establish schools in Yiddish and Hebrew. There was a dearth of qualified teachers, and in 1947 the Joint recruited a hundred teachers from Israel, paid their salaries, and sent them to Germany, Austria, and Italy.

At the same time, teachers' seminaries and courses for DP instructors were organized. The Joint provided supplementary food for the teachers and daily meals for the children. Educational programs were also introduced in the camps on behalf of adults, which included lectures, language instruction, libraries, and clubs. A number of Yiddish theatres were organized, musical orchestras, sport clubs, and similar activities. The Joint brought to the tens of thousands of refugees the finest films and supported Yiddish dramatic groups.

During this time, the JDC Committee on Cultural-Religious Affairs also realized the importance of reprinting textbooks and other educational literature to provide essential books of which there was a shortage. On the same presses which previously printed Nazi hate and propaganda literature, the Joint, in the years between 1946 and 1948, printed 538,500 copies of religious texts and other books. The largest printing project, undertaken with the aid of the American army, was the Wilno Shass in 19 volumes, under the supervision of a committee of noted rabbis.

Immediately after liberation, the Joint again began to function in East European countries where it had been forced to cease activities during Hitlerism and the war. Unfortunately, it found in one European country after another, the ashes of a once blooming Judaism, and all institutions which the Joint had helped establish and maintain after the first world war. The JDC Committee on Cultural-Religious Affairs did everything possible for the surviving Jews in West European countries after the Nazi devastation. In 1949, when the Joint was again forced to leave Poland, it left 65 religious communities functioning, which maintained 105 synagogues and houses of prayer; 71 cemeteries; 36 Talmud Torahs; and a number of other institutions.

In Rumania at the end of 1947 there were 262 communities benefiting from Joint assistance in six provinces. There were in that year 88 secular schools with an enrollment of 5,885 children; and 3,000 youths studied in 51 religious schools, supported by the Joint. In Hungary, the JDC immediately after liberation, came to the aid of 250 communities. In 1948, two yeshivot and twenty-one secular schools with more than 4,000 students were being assisted, and generous help was given to Zionist, Hachshara, and other groups. Cultural and traditional Jewish work was done by the Committee on Cultural-Religious Affairs also in Western Europe, where Jewish spiritual life had to be restored. After the war, France had the largest Jewish community in Western Europe, and JDC maintained cultural and religious institutions on a large scale there, as well as in other Western European countries, among them Belgium, Switzerland, Sweden, the Scandinavian countries, Portugal, Greece, and others.

A very large cultural program was developed in Moslem countries. In these backward lands, the cultural work, as part of the entire JDC program, called for tremendous efforts and very substantial funds. Here, following the creation of the Jewish State, the Jews, numbering some 800,000 souls, suddenly felt surrounded by a sea of Arab hatred. This required not only material aid, but also spiritual support in the new situation in which history had cast them. In the Moslem countries, the JDC generously supports the schools of the Alliance Israelite Universelle, Ozar Hatorah, Lubavitcher yeshivot (seminaries), and local institutions. At the beginning of 1950, JDC supported 225 schools with a total of 60,000 children in ten Moslem countries. The children were also fed and clothed. This work is constantly expanding.

The dramatic aid of the Joint also reached such Jews as the Falashas of Abyssinia, Jews in China, India, Turkey, and South and Central America. A special place in the great cultural work of the Committee is occupied by Israel. For many years, the JDC has been supporting a variety of cultural, educational and religious institutions in Eretz Israel. With the outbreak of the second World War, the work in the Holy Land increased enormously. Many yeshivot from Eastern Europe moved to Israel. Also a large number of rabbis, scholars, and other functionaries, who were in need of help, entered Israel. The JDC Committee on Cultural-Religious Affairs, of course, came to their assistance.

Today, the Committee supports in Israel some 91 yeshivot. The support reaches some 11,800

Council Women Will Build School In Israel

The National Council of Jewish Women, 66-year-old American educational and community service organization, has announced that it will build a high school in Jerusalem.

The details of the $500,000 project were outlined at a press conference at the Council's headquarters, 1 West Forty-seventh Street, by Mrs. Charles Hymes, the president, and Miss Hanah Stein, executive director, who had returned from Israel. They completed arrangements there after consultation with officials of Hebrew University and the Israeli Government.

The construction of the classrooms and laboratories, which will be on a site near Hebrew University, will begin soon, Mrs. Hymes said.

The high school, known as a secondary school in Israel, will serve as the practice teaching center of the John Dewey School of Education of Hebrew University. Since 1948, the Council has supported the John Dewey School with contributions of more than $500,000. The John Dewey School "is Israel's only source of furnishing qualified teachers to meet the serious shortage of teaching personnel in Israel."

The John Dewey School's secondary institution is now divided between two buildings in different parts of Jerusalem. Terming these buildings inadequate, Mrs. Hymes said the pupils "are being forced to evacuate their present borrowed quarters. Israel's "greatest need today is the development of a secondary school system that will be free and universal."

She said that Israeli officials also had called attention to this need to "meet the educational requirements of thousands of young people in the age group between 14 and 18 who are not receiving a secondary school education."

Th Israell Government established a compulsory elementary school education when Israel became a nation. However, because of pressing financial needs, the Government cannot afford a free secondary school system. At present it is granting scholarships to gifted students.

"Zada Gawdy"

BY STERNIE OWEN

With my manuscript in one hand and a "coke" in the other, I approached the den cautiously, timing my entrance to the TV commercial. "Honey, will you listen to something?"

My husband glanced up for a second, spied the manuscript, and roared, "Not now! Can't you see I'm busy?"

I held out the "coke".

"Well, all right, if it won't take more than ten minutes. Turn off the television." He didn't say another word until I finished reading. Then he blurted out. "The trouble with you is . . . you write like you talk . . . in circles."

"For your information, Mr. Brooks Atkinson, this is only the first draft."

"Then read it to me when it's done. Say, I've got an idea. If you want a really interesting story, write one about my great-grandfather."

"I never knew him," I replied coldly. "Did you?"

"No he died in 1904, before I was born. Lived to be a hundred and five, a giant of a man over six feet tall, with fiery red hair and a long flowing beard. My father used to say there wasn't a man in Duluth, or the state of Minnesota for that matter, who —."

"What was his name?"

" 'Zada' Gawdy. Anyway, that's what everyone called him. 'Zada' means grandfather, and Gawdy — well, that was his name, I suppose. Say, did I ever tell you about the time 'Zada' Gawdy's daughter lay dying, and one of her neighbors came running for him?"

"How could you? I didn't know the man existed until now."

"Will you please stop interrupting! As I was saying, this neighbor woman came to call 'Zada' Gawdy to his dying daughter's bedside. Hearing the news, 'Zada,' who was halfway through his customary eight-course dinner, stopped just long enough to invite the lady to join him at the table. She stared at him in amazement, crying out they'd better leave at once while there was time. 'But what can I do for the poor soul now?' protested 'Zada' 'She is in God's hands. There will be time enough when I finish my meal,' and he calmly went on eating."

"No wonder he lived to be a hundred and five," I remarked acidly. "What else was so special about 'Zada' Gawdy?"

"If you can spare a moment, my little penwoman, I'll elaborate. Early one winter afternoon my father and his father's father, 'Zada' Gawdy, went out to the country in a big sleigh drawn by a single horse, to gather firewood. Returning home at dusk, the horse floundered in a snow drift. Ordering my father to remain seated, 'Zada' got out, unhitched the horse, and pulled the sleigh himself a good half-mile — with the horse trudging alongside — until they reached solid ground."

"A regular Paul Bunyan!"

"Mind you," my husband said, "this happened when 'Zada' was still a comparatively young man — maybe in his middle eighties. How he loved horses! One day the old Trojan decided to buy a fine carriage horse he had seen around town. The price was steep, must more than he meant to pay, but he asked the owner to bring her over for a trial run. When the horse was harnessed to 'Zada' 's buggy, and her master took the reins, 'Zada' stepped to one side and called out, 'Now let's see how fast she can go.' To the driver's surprise, the horse barely budged. 'Zada' Gawdy had one foot on the felloe and both hands on the rim of the rear wheel! That's how strong he was."

"No doubt this is where the expression 'strong as a horse' originated," I said.

"Well, smarty, here's one that has nothing to do with horses," my husband continued. "When 'Zada' Gawdy was an old man — he still got up at the crack of dawn — he'd go down to the produce market on Michigan Street to watch the farmers unload their wagons. While they worked, he entertained them with stories of his great strength. One day, as a joke, they told him if he could carry two one-hundred-pound sacks of potatoes, one on each shoulder, he could keep them. 'Zada' hoisted the bags and set off, walking straight uphill all the way from Michigan to Ninth Street, where he presented his prize to a poor immigrant family newly arrived in Duluth."

Recalling the hills of Duluth, I was impressed. I remembered holding my breath the first time I traveled the same route in an automobile. But all I said was, "Now who do you think would be interested in your great-grandfather?"

"No one but me, I suppose. Okay, dearie, you win. I'm curious about Irish coffee, though. Want to try that recipe you have?"

It took me quite a while to hunt up the glass cups and prepare the brew, but I finally made it. "Bet he never touched a drop of this stuff," I wagered, setting the tray down.

"Who?" asked my husband drowsily, rubbing his eyes and pulling himself up straight in the lounge-chair where he had been dozing.

" 'Zada's Gawdy — who else?" Raising the steaming cup I added, "May he rest in peace!"

This story is from the Jewish Frontier.

A little knowledge can be a very dangerous thing when it is a matter of youngsters knowing too much about explosives and how to make and fire them. Children who have found sticks of dynamite or ammunition parts may have the knowledge that allows them to explode the dangerous material, causing fires and often being badly injured.

students and their families. In addition, five research projects and some 700 refugee rabbis, cantors, and other functionaries and their families, are also being assisted. All in all, including Israel, Europe, and the Moslem countries, the cultural and religious activity of the Joint includes some 330 educational and other cultural institutions, benefiting some 100,000 persons, children, youths, and adults. Let it be said that both after the first as well as the second World War, the JDC Committee on Cultural-Religious Affairs has paid special attention to the rehabilitation of yeshivot in Europe and other countries, so that the study of Torah would not cease.

The foregoing will give the contributor to the United Jewish Appeal, which provides funds for JDC activities, an inking of what has been done, year after year, culturally, spiritually, and religiously by the JDC and its Cultural Committee, whose members, despite their normal occupations as scholars and educators, find time and energy to devote to the rebuilding of Jewish life which the evil hand of the Nazis sought to destroy. In the restored Jewish life, which is being tended with so much love and devotion, the Joint's Committee on Cultural-Religious Affairs plays an important role.

Any evidence of lapse in quality or cleanliness should be reported immediately to the local food and drug inspector.

Leader Warns Assimilation Awaits Brazil Jewry

The Brazilian government's "extremely magnanimous immigration policy" was praised by a Brazilian Jewish leader visiting in the U.S. At a luncheon given in New York in his honor by the World Jewish Congress, Grand Rabbi H. Lemle, of Rio de Janeiro, said that President Juscelino Kubitschek's immigration policy has proved "more liberal than any other country's" in the western world. "The Brazilian government shows an understanding sympathy for all Jewish causes, especially Israel", the Brazilian Jewish leader said. He questioned if any other nation had marked Israel's tenth anniversary as had Brazil by displaying its own and the Israeli flag side by side throughout the length of the capital's main street.

Rabbi Lemle was welcomed by Dr. Maurice L. Perlzweig, director of the international affairs department of the World Jewish Congress, who referred to his role in the establishment of the Confederation of Brazilian Jewish Communities as the representative body of the Jews of that country. Rabbi Lemle, accompanied by his wife, came to spend about six weeks in the U.S., partly renewing acquaintance with the American Jewish community structure, partly carrying out a lecture tour. Rabbi Lemle reported that the 120,000 Jews in Brazil live a "free, liberal and beautiful" life. But such an atmosphere also offers an opportunity for "unlimited assimilation" and Rabbi Lemle said that the community did in fact face a serious problem.

"The new generation of Brazilian Jews needs a new interpretation of Judaism, and if it isn't offered soon, it will be too late. Everyone feels that the problem of Brazilian Jewry is not political or economic, it is a question of Jewish content in the life of the individual and the community," Rabbi Lemle warned. Although Brazilian Jewish youth had provided a considerable number of young pioneers for Israel, the Jewish state could no longer be considered the only impetus in their lives.

"The second generation Jew in Brazil is exposed to the menace of assimilation. He lacks a philosophy of Jewish life," Dr. Lemle continued. He said that perhaps the "most tragic aspect" was the fact that there were only six rabbis for the entire community. He doubted if there were more than 18 rabbis in all of Latin America. "Almost all of us came from Germany. Almost all of us were victims of Nazism. Who will take over when we pass on? What is going to happen to the communities of Latin America?" Rabbi Lemle asked. "The question is who can find and give us young rabbis? Our great need is for a handful of young rabbis who could help in providing a new interpretation of Judaism to the younger generation of Jews in Brazil." Rabbi Lemle praised the work of the World Jewish Congress in Brazil and expressed the hope that its activities in that area would be intensified particularly in strengthening the community to face the problems now confronting it.

American Space And Jewish Time

BY DR. SOL LIPTZIN, HONORARY PRESIDENT OF THE JEWISH BOOK COUNCIL OF AMERICA; PROFESSOR OF COMPARATIVE LITERATURE AND CHAIRMAN OF THE DEPARTMENT OF GERMANIC AND SLAVIC LANGUAGES AT THE COLLEGE OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK

We live in American space and Jewish time. By living here and not migrating to Israel, we are accepting our Americanism as an essential part of our being. By working in Hadassah, we are also accepting our Jewishness gladly and not reluctantly, in a mood of exhilaration and not in a mood of frustration and indifference. As we grope our way through the labyrinthean mazes of our communal life, we are constantly asking: what is the meaning of what we do and are? What is the meaning of our Jewish experience on the American scene? What is the significance of our continuing as a unique bicultural minority in an increasingly monocultural environment? Is there a future for a group that still insists on staying outside of the melting-pot and on retaining non-conformist traits in an ever more conformist America?

It is with these questions that American Jewry will be wrestling more and more during coming decades. They are the basic questions of goals to which all questions of means and methods are subordinated. Forces of both degeneration and regeneration are active in our midst; both will continue. Inertia and indifference will hasten decay. We may have to "will" against our environment, if we want to retain our uniqueness, because the American environment is inhospitable to Jewish survival beyond the purely religious sphere. I do not mean that America is anti-Semitic. On the contrary, anti-Semitism was and is but a mild irritant in America. It was not of any consequence in the past except for a brief flurry in the 1870's and 1930's. It is of no great consequence today. It is unlikely to assume dangerous proportions in the coming decades.

Far greater peril threatens the Jewish community from American philo-Semitism. It was American friendliness to Jews which dissolved pre-Revolutionary Jewry, so that despite Jewish immigration, its numbers, fifty years after Bunker Hill, was still 3,000, the same as before the revolution. Had we attempted a few years ago to call together the descendants of colonial Jewry to celebrate our tercentenary here, we would have had an assembly of the finest Christian families of America.

Similarly, what saved the American Jewish community from virtual extinction by the mid-twentieth century was the immigration by the hundreds of thousands of Eastern European Jews since the 1880's. The first generation from 1881 to 1914 formed a Yiddish-speaking enclave in the large metropolitan centers, especially New York. The second generation, from 1914 to the founding of Israel, was bicultural but engaged in flight from Jewishness, which it associated far too frequently with childhood in the slums, and the type of Jewish learning one acquired in cellar classrooms.

The third generation from 1950 on consists of American of Eastern European Jewish origin. The fourth generation, which will be dominant about the year 2000 should, by all historical precedent, be in a state of dissolution and complete cultural assimilation, except for the few who may still be attending a Jewish Temple on Sundays and be listening to eloquent sermons by Jewish pastoral leaders.

This is the picture if we consider only the environmental forces which are leading to decay and dissolution. If they were the only forces impelling our group, then pessimism would be justified. But there are also forces of regeneration and rejuvenation persisting in our midst. They have their source in will; the will of millions of us to live on as Jews, as a distinct group, no matter what the price they may have to be paid for our uniqueness. Where this will is strong, the group will persist, despite all persecutions and allurements. Our history proves this. Where this will is weakened, degeneracy sets in. If we are to persist as a healthy, creative, happy group, we must take steps to strengthen our will to survive. The push of the past, such factors as birth, historic memories, religions traditions, helps to strengthen survival, but is insufficient.

The factor of the present, normal reluctance to change, the feeling of common belongingness, helps survival, but only temporarily. There must also be the pull of the future, the attraction of a group-purpose, the magnetism of an ideal goal for which sacrifices are worth making, the awareness of a Jewish messianism, the knowledge of Jewish chosenness for a specific objective.

Many of us, though not all five million of us, believe we are needed in our uniqueness and we want to live on not merely as human beings, not merely as Americans, but also as Jews, as bearers of Jewishness. Here I would define Jewishness as a reality consisting of common religious beliefs, common ethnic belongingness, common historic memories, common cultural traits, and common messianic longing. This will still be Jewishness in centuries to come and our children's children's children will still be living it alongside of that other reality known as Americanism.

We are today five million Americans whose Jewishness ranges from close to zero at one extreme to close to 100 percent at the other extreme. Those close to the zero end of the scale we shall be losing as the over-friendly American environment nibbles away at them. The greater our inertia and indifference, the greater will be the number drifting towards zero, choosing assimilation, intermarriage, affiliation with attractive Christian denominations or new sects. Yet, though we may lose millions, a saving remnant, still amounting to millions, will remain. If we strengthen Jewish institutions, Jewish education, and desirable Jewish goals, the drift will be reversed and even those who intermarry will prefer to affiliate with us and our numbers may even increase.

Within another generation or two at the most, it is likely that all non-Jewish minorities will have dissolved in the American melting-pot, because they do not want to retain their uniqueness. They immigrated here in order to lose their former group-identity. They are rejecting cultural pluralism. We Jews alone will not have merged with the majority because we alone came to the New World not in order to lose our Jewishness but in order to live it, since we could not live it undisturbed in the pogrom-ridden lands of Eastern and Central Europe.

Let us not stand with folded arms and wait for tomorrow to reveal itself. Let us not drift with the currents of conformity to an uncharted shore. Let us seize our and rudder and aim for a destination where warmth and brotherhood and happiness will surround us and where our creative energies can be unleashed so that we make our contribution to the world at large not as Marranos but as Jews.

I hold that a Golden Era of Jewishness here is a possibility. I say: "Let us will and let us dare and let us not yield to despair. Ours is a wonderful heritage, a priceless heritage. Let us take it from our fathers, let us embed it in our lives during our few brief decades on earth, and, enriched by our dreams, our thoughts, our deeds, let us hand it down to our children and children's children unto the end of time."

Antonio Barrette, the Labor Minister who was chosen to head the Government of the Province of Quebec, is a card-holding, dues-paying member of a labor union and a man of such a variety of accomplishments that soon after the Conservative victory in Ottawa, Mr. Barrette was sounded out as Canadian Ambassador to a foreign country. Yet this man, who holds doctorates from three universities, left school after the seventh grade for a five-cent an hour job with the Canadian National Railway. Today, his 3,000 volume library is one of the largest of the private libraries in the province and he is one of the most cultured men in provincial politics. That he would not have been miscast as an ambassador is substantiated by his last few years as Minister of Labor. He has served both labor and management, and has acted as mediator often, if unobtrusively, to settle major labor problems. Mr. Barrette is particularly proud of the fact that both labor and management have shown confidence in his judgment and impartiality and both have called on him to arbitrate their differences. His health, which was given as the reason for his absence from the political scene during the past four years, has now been restored. Mr. Barrett, at the age of sixty, has represented Joliette, an industrial center in the middle of a multi-million dollar tobacco-growing farm area, since 1936 and kept his seat gallant such opponents as Liberal leader George Lapalme himself. Workers in Joliette as well as farmers of the area express complete confidence in him. He resigned from the C.N.R. after being elected and opened an insurance brokerage firm which his eldest son now helps him to handle. He married a Joliette girl, Miss Estelle Guilbeault, and has four children: Alain, aged 31 years, is an insurance broker; Lise is the wife of Montreal architect, Edvard Hotshorst; Nicole is married to Guy Barrette, a Berthier pharmacist; and the youngest son Serge, is studying law at McGill University. As a machinist, Premier Barrette learned to use his hands and has taken great pains to maintain his skills. He has fashioned most of the furniture in his home just as he has formulated from his voracious reading, his own concepts of sociology, economics and philosophy. Mr. Barrette has been a life-long friend of the late Premier Paul Sauvé, and was the first to be consulted by him after the death of Premier Duplessis. He was a delegate to the International Labour Office, in Geneva, Switzerland, from 1945 to 1951, and three times represented the Province of Quebec at various events in Europe. Mr. Barrette is known as a thought-provoking orator, in both French and English.
